Dialekt

Dialect in British Fiction, 1800-1836 a database which has been designed as a tool for identifying and analysing the representation of dialect in 100 novels published between 1800 and 1836, a time period during which literary dialect usage was just beginning to be popularized. Dialect in British Fiction seeks to examine why dialect speech is represented in English literature and why it has been represented in these particular ways
American English Dialect Recordings The Center for Applied Linguistics (CAL) Collection features approximately 118 hours of recordings documenting North American English dialects. These recordings were made from 1941 to 1984, and they reveal distinctions in speech related to gender, race, social class, education, age, literacy, ethnic background, and occupational group Dialect levelling and received pronunciation This page contains a Web version of a research paper by Paul Kerswill of Reading University's School of Linguistics and Applied Language Studies (University of Reading, Whiteknights, PO Box 218, Reading, RG6 6AA, UK). The paper was published originally under the title: Mobility, meritocracy and dialect levelling: the fading (and phasing) out of Received Pronunciation

Galactic Central Authors - This section covers bibliographies devoted to a single author (or at most a small number of authors), concentrating on those who have devoted most of their output to the science fiction, fantasy and horror genres / Magazines - This is the section that attempts to document all known fiction magazines, in varying levels of detail. As there are over 6000 of these, they are also organised into various different subsets for those who, for instance, are not wildly interested in 19th century magazines. A fuller description of these can be found by following the link to the left, or for those who want to jump straight to the chase, the following are the main subdivisions / Oddments - This final section just contains any other bibliographies that seemed to be of passing relevance to the previous sections, not least bibliographies of bibliographies in those categories - Galactic Central Publications

Library of Southern Literature includes a wide range of literary works of the American South published before 1924. This collection was originally based on Dr. Robert Bain's bibliography of the hundred most important southern literary works and continues to expand under the guidance of scholarly advisors Dr. Joseph M. Flora and Dr. William L. Andrews. This collection begins with some of the earliest texts about America written by British discoverers that set the foundation for American letters and traces the development of southern literature through to the beginning of the twentieth century
